

Just as we are

*Yet I am poor and needy; may the Lord think of me. You are my help and my deliverer; O my God,
do not delay. (Psalm 72:12)*

Some Tips to Remember

Abuse can come in many forms.

50% of Canadian women experience physical or sexual abuse in their lifetimes.

People don't know much about the law, but it's important if they're in a situation of family breakdown and/or abuse at home.

A family law lawyer can be helpful to a woman if her partner tried to bully her, was violent, or has more power than her. The lawyer can also help if she can't read, speak, or understand English.

Legal Aid can help you afford a lawyer. If a woman was abused or bullied, Legal Aid is more likely to help them out.

Legal Aid can also help women who were abused by giving them two free hours of legal advice. The woman would have to fill out an "Advice Lawyer Family Violence Authorization Form."

Duty counsel lawyers are found in the courts and can help people with lower incomes if they don't have a lawyer.

Family Law Information Centres can give legal information on family law, how family court works, and support services for families.
